Answer Question 01.

Source A

From a confidential Soviet record of a meeting between Stalin and Chinese Communist Party leaders, Moscow, 27 June 1949. Xinjiang was an independent region within north west China.

Liu Shaoqi handed Stalin a letter from Mao Zedong, which thanked Stalin for the enormous aid given to China by the USSR.

Stalin said that the USSR had decided to provide China with a further loan of 300 million dollars. The loan will be provided in the form of equipment, machines and various kinds of materials and goods.

Stalin said that China should not put off the occupation of Xinjiang because a delay might lead to Western interference in Xinjiang's affairs. There are large deposits of oil and cotton there, which China needs badly. After taking Xinjiang the Chinese population there should be increased by resettlement in order to develop this huge and rich region and strengthen China's borders.
